Remarkable Racing—Three Successive Dead Heats.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—The second day of the fall meeting at Prospect Park Fair Ground Association yesterday, was one of the most remarkable events in the annals of the American turf. The most prominent sporting men declared that there never was such racing on any other course in the world The first race was for a purse of $400, all ages, one mile and three quarters There were entered Coffee a Lightning colt, Chikabiddy Utica, Bingenuin and Mark Jordan. Bingenuin and Mark Jordan made a dead heat, and the trial between them for the purse was postponed till the other events on the card came off, when they were pulled upon to decide the matter, and they had another run The Judge again declared a dead heat The third heat was also declared a dead heat and the horses were obliged to enter again Bingenuin finally won the heat, and it was the most closely contested race that ever took place in this country Time, 3 31 3 38, 3:36, 3:39½.

The third race was for all ages, one and a quarter miles, for $400, for which there were the following entries Wheatlee Hattie O Neil, Camden and Liverpool The first was a dead heat between Hattie O Niel and Wheatley in 2:13. They ran the dead off Wheatley winning very easily by three lengths, in 2 25 "This is the first time," says the Herald, "in the history of racing, of two horses making three dead heats in a dash race."

The Daily Oregonian.

SATURDAY MORNING SEPT [illegible] 1873

THE LEGISLATIVE PLATFORM

Aside from the resolution declaring in favor of polygamy, local and political corruption the platform adopted by the Albany Convention is quite up to the average of such performances. The liberal and progressive political principles that have made the Republican party the hope and stay of the country are forgotten after the effete meaningless rhodomontade which constitutes most of the Democratic platform. If the friends of Smith Hipple had not been determined to defend him all moral principles and sentiments they say to save him from the consequences of his crimes, the candidate might reasonably hope to be elected by a handsome majority. He will be overwhelmingly defeated with this plank under him no matter how hard workies do for him.

The Convention pronounced in favor of a humane policy toward the Indians. This cannot but be gratifying to right minded and right hearted people. The mad-dog cry raised last winter against the peace policy was mistaken by the Democracy for a real current of public sentiment and their Convention thought to gain votes by demagoguing on the subject. We are truly glad that the Republicans did not allow themselves to join the rabble in this shout.

THE NOMINEE

After Rev J R Geary, Dr J W Watts, Hon T W Davenport, Richard Williams, Esq, and R P Boise had successively declined to accept a nomination for Congress at the hands of the Convention on account of the resolution declaring that John Hipple, not having committed any high crimes and misdemeanors for some time, was entitled to great praise for restraining himself so long, the Convention nominated Hiram Smith, of Linn county, by acclamation, about one third of the members voting, while some of the rest were leaving the room in disgust, and others were going through violent paroxysms of laughter at the huge joke.

Hiram—not John Hiram but Hi Smith is a retail merchant who lives at Harris burg, and a very clever fellow. He lacks very much of having all the qualifications—or attainments—one would expect in a Congressman, but he has some native ability, and his deficiency in respect of education ought not alone to be regarded as sufficient ground for refusing to support him. If Hi went into the race unencumbered with any sins except his own, he would command nearly or quite the entire strength of the party.

FOUR BULLETIN'S MISREPRESENTATIONS

In his chagrin and anger over the loss of the city printing, the Bulletin makes a bitter attack upon the Councilman who voted to take the advertising from the Bulletin and have it done at the Oregonian, and upon Councilman Story in particular. This attack is based upon the statement that when the resolution passed there were only six members of the Council present, and that Councilman Story is one of the directors and stockholders" of the Oregonian Publishing Company, and therefore directly interested in the result of the vote.

The vote was: Councilmen Besser Burton Caswell, Hoyt, Lyon and Story. Absent—Caylus on a trip to the States eastward, Moreland on a pleasure visit to San Francisco, and Russell, not in town.

The Bulletin is simply untrue. Mr Russell, instead of being "not in town," was in town and in his seat in the Council Chamber (corner of Second and No. 1 streets) when the vote was taken. Mr Caswell is the editor of the Oregonian, and Councilman Story is named as one of the directors and stockholders of the Company, and is supposed to be the owners of that paper.

Councilman Story is not and never has been one of the directors of the Oregonian Publishing Company, nor named as such, and is not a stockholder in the company. This is falsehood No 2 and could be the one at that.

Yet the resolution was passed. Mr Story voted for it though by so doing he voted money into his own pocket work to his own interest.

This is falsehood No 3, based upon falsehood No 2.

Out of this series of falsehoods a half dozen others are developed to which it is hardly worth while to make specific reference, as we have shown that those which he at the foundation of the Bulletin's attack are untrue. The Bulletin had a reporter present at the Council meeting when this resolution was adopted and is therefore in possession of the facts. What then are we to say of its publishing this falsehood about the number of members present? There were only two members absent, one in the East and one we do not know where. The Bulletin appears to understand perfectly how Councilmen Caywood and Moreland would vote upon any motion affecting the pockets of the ring, and complains therefore that the Council does not deliver its business for one of these gentlemen to come from the East and for the other to come in from his farm to his place in the Council. The Bulletin may be able to command the votes of these two Councilmen as it intimates we do not know that it is so—but should we consider the fact very complimentary to them if we could know it. But we take this occasion to say to the Bulletin that if it does own any of the Councilmen it had better have them attend the meetings of the Council instead of asking the Council to suspend operations till it can get through their amusements.

There were seven members present at the two absent when the resolution was passed. Councilman Hillick [illegible] excused from voting by [illegible] to the Oregonian, it was excused; of the other six Councilmen present [illegible] one—Mr Lyon—voted against the motion to give the printing to the Oregonian. Suppose Messrs Caywood and Moreland had been present, and had been completely devoted to the Bulletin's interests, would have made the result? Three are not a majority of nine.

The Bulletin insinuates that Councilman Lyon is [illegible] with the city for oil [illegible] for the election [illegible] for Councilman from [illegible] contracts with the city which would [illegible] thought [illegible] Among the checks [illegible] would [illegible] strands of such character would [illegible] would [illegible] for Councilman. Mr Story has no such connection with the city and never had [illegible] which [illegible] ever sold scows to the city. [illegible] supplies [illegible] the public with [illegible] would feel [illegible] Councilmen [illegible] the Council at the same meeting that passed the resolution of which the Bulletin complains, sold [illegible] for painting. What connection [illegible] Councilman Lyon had [illegible] for painting, we do not know. We would not willingly do Councilman Lyon injustice, and we do not wish it understood that he was [illegible] the Councilman in question, and we do not wish it understood that he was [illegible] payment of the bill for which he [illegible] whether he did or not. If the charge of voting upon a measure in which he was interested could be made against any Councilman the record would seem to point to Councilman Lyon. We have not the slightest idea that he could commit such an act, but we should be able to show circumstance appearing to support such a charge if we saw fit to make it, while the Bulletin makes the charge against Councilman Story without even the appearance of foundation in truth.

A QUEER MINISTER

Of all the incongruous figures that have been thrown to the surface in Spain by Amadeo's timidity and Don Carlos's effrontery, Senor Sunce is most incongruous. Sunce was a member of the Madrid Cabinet—of what Cabinet one may well despair of knowing. But in the particular state of the Spanish mind a more ridiculous thing has been seldom found than may be found in the extract which we append hereto. We doubt if any Minister of any country ever compressed into so small a space a complete demonstration of his absurd unfitness for a position of the kind Senor Sunce was holding when he addressed the Cortes in this strain:

"I am ready to fight the Carlists tooth and nail. I am ready to punish severely the assassins and incendiaries of Alcoy or those who elsewhere may commit or have committed similar atrocities. But when it becomes a question of shedding the blood of those who share my political creed (correligionarios) I confess that my heroism does not go so far as this. [A voice—But if they are rebels?] They may be rebels in your estimation and even in mine, but it is one thing to consider them rebels and another to fight them. There are here only two courses open—that of resistance and attack or one of concession and conciliation. May I speak frankly? [Cries of 'Yes.'] I declare that as concerns our correligionarios actually in rebellion at Cartagena or others who may rebel elsewhere we ought to practise towards them a policy of conciliation and concession. [A voice from the Centre—This would make government impossible.] I would never set my signature to a document ordering troops to attack with bayonets or bullets our correligionarios though in armed rebellion." Vociferous applause from the Left.]

From indications that the corn crop of Illinois and Iowa is not likely to be more than one-half to two-thirds the average yield the New York Times argues that there will be a reduced pressure on the through freight lines, lower freights, higher prices for corn and considerable better net income to the farmers. If precedent is of any value the probabilities are that results will directly contradict this prediction so far at least as a reduction in freights is concerned. The invariable policy of railways hitherto controlling the movements of crops. If carried out in this emergency would raise the tariffs as the freights decreased. The men who have control of transportation lines seem to have but one end in view, namely, the amassing of enormous private fortunes within the shortest possible time. Receipts must reach a certain figure in the millions. If the volume of freights be small tariffs must increase in inverse proportion. In any event the welfare of the shipper must yield to the avaricious necessity of the freighter. But even in such a contingency of events as that cited by the Times it is hardly desirable that the farmers movement lose a good deal of its zest which is suggested by that journal as a probable thing. The farmers movement has already attained a steady growth that no freight tariff can arrest. The aspect of a single season. It indeed almost out of a small crop high prices and reduction of freights we shall be puzzled to know what under the heavens it was begun for. Perhaps the farmers understand that its death would be the signal for another term of the screw increased extortion, bringing, pinching want and famine to one part of the land, and in the other poverty and nakedness in the midst of God's most bountiful harvests.

Coming home tired and late we can not do more than make a bare notice of the Odd Fellows' turn out and its manner this morning. We shall endeavor to collect from [illegible] next issue we shall give [illegible] of the names of the members who [illegible] throw the Odd Fellow party [illegible] the procession worked in [illegible] about the [illegible] to cost the [illegible] assessments.

We [illegible] the opinion of Mr Campbell [illegible] Switzler's Statistical Register, Mr McCulloch's [illegible] upholding the [illegible] to collect the Seventh Annual Interest on the Southern Pacific Railroad Bonds, which [illegible] the Secretary of the Treasury [illegible] September 1st [illegible] Opinion [illegible]

The New York Herald has sent out [illegible] to the effect that [illegible] Grant [illegible] Secretary [illegible] Treasury [illegible] Secretary [illegible] Treasury [illegible] Secretary [illegible] Treasury

SATURDAY MORNING SEPT 13 1873

CITY.

THE I Library—We [illegible] the library by and find Mr Cox the Librarian busily engaged in placing [illegible] placed b[illegible] proper places and giving information to inquirers as to the latest additions and [illegible] of the different books To fill in [illegible] a year is much [illegible] patience and [illegible] ready answer any question and [illegible] visitors perfectly at home A large table in the north room of the library where the books are kept enables the [illegible] of examining large books [illegible] volumes on the table and thus allow the reader to peruse them with greater ease Over one thousand volumes have been added to the library since January 1st and special care is taken that each volume is kept in correct condition the books being rebound when necessary The members up to as large a [illegible] ever and now that absent members have returned from summer trips, the attendance will be much greater It is likely the library will be much [illegible] for the purpose of keeping the reading [illegible] donated by the widow of the late General Canby which is certainly a good thing as visitors will then know that particular library the moment they enter the room Now, as new papers have been added the present large collection and, besides his a complete file of papers and [illegible]

Checkers and chess in one of the rooms enables lovers of these games to spend a pleasant evening Everything bears a comfortable appearance

MISTAKEN IDENTITY.—We heard a good story told the other day on a sewing machine agent of our city He had occasion to go up the river on the Gov Grover, of which Charley Holman is the gentlemanly Captain Whilst Charley was sauntering through the cabin, looking after the welfare of his guests, he was accosted by our sewing machine agent in a confidential tone, something after this wise "I have to ask pardon for sitting up so late last night, but the fact is it is so long since I sat up with a young lady, that I forgot myself" Charley didn t exactly see the point of the apology, and remarked, "I guess you are mistaken in the person," and passed on At the next landing place the sewing machine chap asked Charley if he wasn't going to get off there, when the Captain informed him of the official relation he bore to the Grover Thereupon our hero seemed to get new light on the subject, and quickly vamoosed in much confusion Subsequently it transpired that the sewing machine agent was laboring under the impression that Charley was the paternal relative of the young lady with whom he sat up so late, and on which occasion he was so unfortunate as to forget himself Charley tells the story with great zest, and his fat sides shake with augher as he calls to mind the ludicrous case of mistaken identity

PASSENGERS FOR CALIFORNIA —The steamer Orellamme sailed for San Francisco at 7 o clock last evening with the following passengers W C Curtis, — Marsh, F D Crouch, Stephen Bowers and wife, Miss E C Wakefield Mr Frank Warren, Capt Pollock and wife, R A Pierre and child, C H Larabee, Mrs S N Coyle, Mrs J Hamilton, S Jones, Mrs Williams, servant and 2 children, A Merrill and wife, Mrs. Bowers and 3 children, T M Reed, Jr., John Kenworthy, Rev D Freeman, Dr Shortlefford, W R Bleine, T Lloyd, T W Johnson, O W Moore, Dr R Willard and 4 children Mrs W R Wakefield, Miss Thompson, Miss Fanny Westcott, J Warren J M Stewart, W H White, Mrs G W Tucker, Mrs M J Thompson and daughter, John R. ORTHOGRAPHY —All persons who have to deal with documents prepared by the masses generally, sometimes find one which is noted for its peculiar bad spelling but the following, which was presented to the County Commissioners of Multnomah county, a few days ago, [illegible] some of the worst orthography we have seen in a long time We give an exact copy of the letter, or petition, as it may be, except the name

"PORTLEND the 6, 1873

Honarabal County Comishanors—gantalman I wish you to grant me parmishon to fence my land lays in the City of est Portland lain on Sea Sanday on I am pain taxes Caty and County taxes on it as the Property a gaining it is leid of in lots and blocks if you will par mit me I will open the street for travel"

THE OREGON PANORAMA —We learn that Reed's Panorama has been most thoroughly indorsed by the people and public men of Washington Territory, drawing crowded houses wherever exhibited The agent, Mr Towl, writes us that he will return to Oregon in time for the Linn county Fair He will exhibit it at that place and also at the Washington county Fair at Hillsboro Thence he will go to the State Fair at Salem, where the Panorama will be on exhibition during entire Fair week We trust everybody in Oregon will see this panorama, as it gives them ideas of our country which cannot be obtained otherwise except by much travel and great expense

NORTH PORTLAND—A walk through the northern part of our city discloses the fact that improvements are not confined to the burnt district. In Couch s Addition, west of the [illegible] buildings are springing up near each other down to the mouth of Balch Creek Many of these structures are small while others are neat and substantial A look at any part of Portland will convince one of her rapid growth, notwithstanding the common complaint of croakers in our midst about the dullness of the times here

PUBLIC SPIRIT —Since the first steps were taken towards the establishment of the Oregon museum in this city it has received valuable aid from several parties We take pleasure in noting the fact that Joseph Buchtell Esq yesterday gave substantial encouragement to the enterprise by presenting to it a valuable private collection of curiosities The donation was gratefully received and is highly praiseworthy on the part of the donor in thus helping on a matter of public interest

TOO MUCH FREEZING.—About six inches his side of Avalon, yesterday a drunken fellow fell from the platform of the front car and all who witnessed the accident presumed that the man was killed The train was backed up, and an examination of the individual demonstrated that he had sustained no serious injury The fall would probably have killed a sober man The chap had a ticket for some point south of Albany but was too drunk to get on the right train

DISTRIBUTION OF SCHOOL FUND —By a provision of the school law the third Monday in September is set for a second distribution of funds in the treasury, at the discretion of the Superintendent The sum of $13 15 is reported by the Treasurer which will pass to each person of school age $3 49 The Clerks of the various districts in Multnomah county will issue orders for the several amounts at their offices on Monday September 15th

RATHER COOL.—Yesterday afternoon a gentleman of this city, after loading his wife and children to overflowing out of doors with articles of clothing which had been extracted from the wilderness of trunks and lodges His actions were viewed with great curiosity by the inmates of the neighborhood, and finally he whirled out of sight with delay He looked unconcerned enough from the premises

UNDERTAKER —The [illegible] edifice being completed [illegible] will be resumed to-morrow morning, at 11 o clock meeting at 7 00 The church seats are always free and a cordial invitation extended to all visitors The Sunday School meets at the usual hour 12 30

MY LION

For [illegible] may life nearly seventeen years ago I [illegible] I was alone in the wide world I would be present in that but it would be between the Paddington station and Bath. I had all but missed the train so that I was [illegible] only time I hurry me into a first [illegible] arrange wherein [illegible] future lady would be seated and to give me a [illegible] impunity to get [illegible] Markery [illegible] when I turned up [illegible] I [illegible] train finished [illegible]

All right! Of course I should [illegible] but I should think it seventeen and I nearly [illegible] ter I might be trusted to take care [illegible] during a three hours' journey the [illegible] my uncle had put me in the [illegible] aunt would take me out at the other

As soon as I had arranged myself and my [illegible] longings comfortably in my corner [illegible] survey of my fellow passengers. [illegible] gray old woman in an exasperating [illegible] who was looking at my luggage, [illegible] too pointed and brilliant a smile, [illegible] rusty nails of the juggalest description [illegible] poor little hat [illegible] an attractive one it was too [illegible] with the most poignant little way [illegible] unquestionable brooding over it with [illegible] and wings. For my part I think what [illegible] face it was worked to spoil it by [illegible] daily. But I should have attracted much more attention if I had worn an exasperating, commonplace look my fellow-travellers with an aggravating bow at the top—and beside Tom would not have liked it.

I was steadily losing my temper—it was too provoking. Here was somebody evidently just as ready to find fault and take care of me as anybody at home. My only comfort was a hope that the bible might get out at the next station, or at all events at some distance from Bath. Ah, how little I knew what was coming, or I should have felt glad to have had her glaring twice as grimly from the opposite seat.

"Traveling alone?"

"Yes."

What an unnecessary question, I thought.

"You are much too young and too pretty to be permitted to do so."

I meekly answered that my youth and prettiness were faults over which I had no control and hinted at the possibility that time might be expected to cure both if only I lived long enough.

She smiled—yes, really, not a bad smile, either.

"While waiting for that, you should have [illegible] body to take care of you."

"Take care of me!" I exclaimed, with a little shudder of disgust. "I am quite able to take care of myself—indeed, I am tired of being taken care of. I am almost worn out. Besides, I [illegible] two garden parties, and have long left the school-room" (with dignity.)

"My dear, the school room would be the best place for you for the next half-dozen years. I must leave you at the next station, but I will tell the guard to look after you. You will [illegible] in time how good a thing it is to be cared for. Una without her lion, would never get safely through this world."

The train stopped. I helped her to gather all her bags and rugs.

"Good-by, my dear; your little face has made my day look brighter to an old woman so you leave my leave to keep it unchanged as long as you can," and she actually patted my cheek with a kind old hand as she passed out.

I [illegible] her take her place in a little basket [illegible] who was waiting for her—watched the [illegible] man [illegible] grand hat in [illegible] giving her all the story of life [illegible] and felt sorry, as I [illegible] head nod, when the carriage [illegible] right down a shady country [illegible] her in fancy to a flowery [illegible] where I felt sure that she lived [illegible] servants, quaint furniture, and [illegible] cats, and birds. How little I [illegible] that one day I should—but I forestall [illegible] not anticipate, as real authors [illegible] us in our own place; I had [illegible] them.

The train had stopped at a quiet little station, and was just beginning to move on past [illegible] and Polly's box, when the door suddenly [illegible] and a man jumped in [illegible] me that he would not [illegible] time. Tom has told me since [illegible] was a "d," and, if a "cad" is an [illegible] red-haired person, with [illegible] complexion, with coarse rings, a sky-[illegible] and an [illegible] odor of [illegible] I know the difference quite well, [illegible] smoker myself, but the very best [illegible] I quite enjoy the smell—then [illegible] he was rightly designated.

[illegible] at a single glance, as one does [illegible] and bent [illegible] over my book, [illegible] the hour which would bring me [illegible] was over. Presently I was [illegible] so amusing that I had forgotten [illegible] beetle. The train had left [illegible] far behind, and I was going at [illegible] suddenly a horrid voice close [illegible] my ear said in the most start, and I looked up to [illegible] hideous face close to mine—

"Taking a little nap, eh? I'm sure a whiff of [illegible] will do you good. This carriage is [illegible] close—that was the creatures, very ex-[illegible] you! "Beetles, it's desperate [illegible] for your eyes to read through that speckled [illegible]

[illegible] lying I bent my head lower over [illegible] but the letters were getting confused [illegible] was beating with fright.

"Poor little thing! Deaf is she? and he [illegible] the seat opposite and leaned across, so [illegible] I had to shrink into my corner to avoid his touch. Poor little Una needed her help [illegible].

"Bad for the eyes mass, and such shiners as yours are too good to be wasted on that [illegible] book. Give a fellow a peep at them!" And a great red hand advanced toward my veil.

I could only cower into my corner with a [illegible] cry of terror—one helpless call on Uncle, knowing the while how far away he was, and how unconscious of his poor little Polly's trouble.

In putting up his hand to my veil the man [illegible] me and the touch slight as it was, [illegible] a fury of anger such as I had never felt before, and I hope never to feel again, it [illegible] my voice.

"You shall not! How dare you! You must not touch me—uncle will kill you."

The wretch laughed at my puny rage.

"Kill me for taking care of you! If he does not wish [illegible] to fill his place, he should look after you better, and not let you out alone. You had better be civil, or—"

He drew out a large clasp-knife as he spoke and began deliberately to open it, looking at me all the while. It was time at last. I should never, never go home again! One flash of thought, which seemed to me a second to take in all my past with its little discontents, naughtiness, and great happiness—my aunt's anguish when she found me lying dead under uncle's opening of the telegram which would bring the news—the darkened home the broken hearts which would sure carry till they died the remembrance of the terrible fate of their wilful but oh! their loving darling—all this occurred so vividly to be that with a great cry for help to Heaven I fell at the man's feet and entreated him not to kill me.

"Kill you! I thought it was your uncle who was to kill me! Bless your little heart I am going to take care of you. You look pale. Now didn't you come off in too great a hurry to have time for breakfast? Have a bit of luncheon!"—stooping to take a black bag from under the seat. "I always go about provided with something good. I'm a soft hearted fool I am, and never see a fine young woman suffer, if I can help it. Peck a bit now—do you have a hungry look."

What should I—must I do. I sat up and said as steadily as I could choking back the tears—for I would not cry before him.

"I am not hungry. I will not eat. Don't speak to me any more. You must not. I am a lady."

"A lady! I know what. Do you think I'd be so good to you if you were not? I know a lady when I see her, and I'm hungry lady too—I know you was [illegible] to pack a bit. Don't be bashful!"

By this time he had unlocked the bag, and taken from it—two [illegible] wrapped in [illegible] but which nevertheless [illegible] unbolted turnip—turnips all [illegible] with the soil of the field from which the wretch had taken it! He began to [illegible] and [illegible] I looked on.

Was he mad. I would try to [illegible] him and do as he wished and then perhaps he would not hurt me. I should see him with my aunt now, and at that thought I felt the tears coming again but opened my eyes wide at it and bit my lips hard—the tears must not fall. I crushed them back and sat watching my companion till having peeled the turnip to his satisfaction, he cut off a thick slice, and handed it to me. Raw turnip! And touched by those fingers!

"Come, take it, my beauty—a fresh ripe and [illegible] as your own cheek. Peaches is dear too this season but I give no heed to that. It suits me, I find a pretty girl to eat on it. I don't grudge the money. Can pick [illegible] or do as I want me to feed you. Now I shan't have it with me. Thank [illegible] After all my trouble that aunt [illegible] without [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible]

Think you I am [illegible] by the [illegible] of turnip? [illegible] at all events I could [illegible] it all every [illegible] taking [illegible] Then [illegible] An thin [illegible] was there! [illegible] I [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
